PROJECT INFORMATION

The City's Subdivision Code's major update began in 2017, as the code itself was previously first adopted in 2006. A minor update of the code was completed in 2015. However, it was determined that a significant update to the code was necessary due to outdated standard practices in the development community. The city proceeded by hiring outside help through a consulting firm and obtain consulting services with The Planning Center.

The project kicked off in fall 2017, where the city created a steering committee to help guide the project and garner feedback and direction on changes to the code. Steering Committee members included staff, developers, citizens, realtors, and other stakeholders of the city. The committee completed its task by spring 2018.

By the summer of 2018, the proposed text amendment changes were vetted through a broad stakeholder group that included developers, builders, utilities, design professionals, associations, and large stakeholder landowners. By the end of 2018, multiple comments were received, and in 2019 staff began to finalize each chapter for adoption. Since the Subdivision Code includes changes to engineering standards and various sections were being removed from the Subdivision Code, a separate project was initiated to adopt the City's Design Standards Manual (DSM). The DSM is a document that is not policy-driven. Instead, it is a design construction guide/document for various engineering components, such as road, grading, and other engineering design standards. Drafting and vetting the DSM was a 12-month process and is now ready for Council adoption, scheduled for July 21, running concurrently with the Subdivision Code Update.
